Comments:

@@@I am writing as a private citizen who has been, as I am sure you all have as well, for years inundated with unsolicited credit card offers. These offers have become ever more specific and dangerous as data base technology has improved and more of my private information is available to more credit card companies.

This marketing technique has proven to be harmful to the general population because of Identity Theft. I have to take time out of my day, everyday, to shred pre-approved offers that could easily be taken and used fraudulently. These are multiple offers that come to my name, my company and my wife.

I hope that you will indeed follow through with your proposal to stop!! preapproved offers. The Do-Not-Call list is the best thing that happened last year and stopping preapproved offers would be even better.

Thank You, Derek
